Beyond Regionalism?

Regional Cooperation, Regionalism and Regionalization in the Middle East

Edited by Cilja Harders, Freie Universität Berlin, Germany and Matteo Legrenzi, University of Ottawa, Canada

'The great strength of this collection is its eclectic mix of theoretical approaches and topical foci. The authors come to different conclusions about the prospects for regional cooperation in various areas of the Middle East and around different issues, allowing the reader to appreciate the range of debates on these issues.' – F. Gregory Gause, III, University of Vermont, USA

'...tackles the critical question why the Middle East – unlike most other regions – has failed to develop robust institutions to promote regional security and development. In reviewing the contemporary challenges faced by Middle Eastern states, it offers strong analysis and valuable case studies to explore the limits and opportunities of cooperation in a troubled region.' – Louise Fawcett, St. Catherine's College, Oxford, UK

This volume offers refined theoretical models and approaches which are attuned to the new dynamics and contradictions of a wide range of regionalist projects in the contemporary Middle East. Case studies of the most important regional organizations in different policy fields offer comprehensive overviews of the main actors, institutions, historical development and current issues.
