INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE: JOINTLY ORGANISED BY THE LEIBNIZ
RESEARCH CENTER FOR INCLUSIVE CITIZENSHIP AND THE ECPR
STANDING GROUP CITIZENSHIP

At the First International Congress of the Leibniz Research Center CINC in cooperation with the Biannual Conference of the Standing Group Citizenship of the ECPR, we will jointly examine various aspects of inclusion and citizenship as belongings, practices and acts. Its aim is to facilitate a theoretical discussion as well as a presentation of empirical findings. We will look at citizenship and inclusion as social practices from different interdisciplinary perspectives such as gender and migration, learning and education, digitalization, medicine and cultural heritage.

The normative and analytical dimensions of inclusive citizenship will be defined and the inherent antinomies of normative concepts of inclusion and the ambivalences of citizenship will be reflected. With the aim to facilitate a theoretical discussion and presentation of empirical findings, this interdisciplinary conference will consider citizenship and inclusion as social practices from a range of perspectives, such as: gender and migration, learning and education, digitalisation, medicine and cultural heritage.

We understand citizenship as a dual character of civic status and civic practice, including the tension between desired inclusion and actual co-produced exclusion. The duality of civic status and civic practice is itself always in a dichotomous state between desired or propagated inclusion and actual co-produced exclusion. Citizenship refers to both membership status and membership roles in a socialisation process. In terms of status and practice, citizenship controls specific configurations of exclusion and inclusion across different socialization processes.

STANDING GROUP CITIZENSHIP

In a globalised world, the need for orientation, self-localisation and negotiation of individual group memberships as well as the requirements for the self-determined action of individuals are increasing. The analysis of these processes of socialisation from the perspective of inclusion and citizenship reveals increasing options for action and opportunities for personal and institutional learning. Moreover, this leads to unavoidable tensions between inclusion and exclusion, resulting in difficult dilemmas between competing normative claims and paradoxes in the structure of socialisation processes that block action.

The conference "Inclusive Citizenship as Belongings, Practices and Acts" has an interdisciplinary approach. We look forward for presentations and posters from educational, historical, sociological and political science, special education, and didactic perspectives.
